Michigan has 12 federally recognized Native American tribes that all operate at least one casino. Each of the tribes — not each of the different casinos — is a casino operator that can issue a license to a partnering online platform (one apiece for sports betting, online casino, and online poker).

The Lawful Internet Gaming Act and the Lawful Sports Betting Act were the two most influential laws established in the process. Here is a closer look at both including taxation, rules of play and the intersection of tribal casinos.

According to both laws, Michigan's tribes must waive sovereign immunity for certain administrative purposes, granting oversight to the MGCB and Ingham County circuit courts.

Some of the most important portions of the online gambling law deal with taxes and accounting. For instance, in Years 1-3 of implementation, online casino and poker operators cannot deduct more than 10% of gross receipts as "free play" to determine adjusted gross receipts. In Year 4, it's a 6% maximum, and in Year 5, it's 4%.

In December 2019, Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer signed a series of bills into law, expanding gambling options in the Great Lakes State after a years-long legislative struggle with many stops and starts.

For the purposes of betting, the law states that an “athletic event” does not include pari-mutuel horse racing, events where participants are high school level or below (unless the majority of participants are 18 or older), casino-style games, and fantasy contests.

Michigan has 15 casino operators distributing one license apiece for sports betting, online casino, and online poker. At maturity, Michigan could play host to 45 total sites. It’s a little more complicated in New Jersey, where there are no tribal casinos but eight casino operators and three active racetracks.

Michigan’s 12 federally recognized Native American tribes have compacts with the state that dictate their gambling provisions. The compacts require the tribes to pay the state 8% of each casino’s net win on electronic games of chance and 2% to local municipalities.

Michigan has a rich history in the gambling world. Here are some of the key dates in the state’s history with casino gambling:

[In 1999 Michigan adopted SB 562, which made it specifically unlawful to use the Internet to violate certain provisions of Michigan's anti-gambling laws, including sections 750.301 through 306 and 750.311. In 2000 Michigan adopted Public Act 185 which repealed the references to those anti-gambling sections. Thus, Michigan is not a state that has in effect a specific prohibition against using the Internet to make, offer or accept bets over the Internet.]

In NJ, cross-selling between platforms has boosted revenue month after month, with online casinos reporting upwards of $100 million in monthly revenue by the summer of 2021. There is no reason to think that Michigan operators won’t do the same.

But the true measure of Michigan’s success may come from cross-selling. Several of the online casino operators coming to Michigan plan to double as sports betting brands, such as FanDuel and DraftKings. Those companies could benefit from the dual roles, cross-selling customers who may have only wanted to spin a few online slots.
