The billionaire owners of real-world casinos were unhappy about this sudden 'online' alternative to gambling in their traditional bricks and mortar establishments. They lobbied the US government to have online wagering shut down. While the government did not go that far, they amended an ancient act that prohibited wagering on games of chance over 'telephone wires' to include internet channels. Pretty soon, the vast majority of online gambling sites were no-go areas to people in the United States.
