February 26, 2013 was a great day for the gambling community in New Jersey. It was a great day because the New Jersey Legislature passed bill A2578, which saw the state's gambling sites go live for the first time ever. This legislation was the brainchild of one person: Sen. Ray Lesniak. He pushed the bill to its very end as a way of getting the ailing economy of Atlantic City back on its feet. After signing the bill into law, Chris Christie, the 55th governor of New Jersey, described it as a "responsible yet exciting option that will make Atlantic City more competitive while also bringing financial benefits."

After Nevada had been the only state in the U.S. to offer legal gambling for more than four decades, New Jersey passed legislation to allow casinos in Atlantic City the mid-1970s, with the first casino opening in 1978.
