While online gambling was not officially legalized in the Netherlands until recently, many gambling outfits have been operating in the country. Examples include Holland Casino (a State-owned land-based Casino), and a host of illegal gambling websites. In 2018 alone, the number of Dutch players on these sites rose from 1.3 million to 1.86 million.

QUESTION: What is the legal age for online casinos in Netherlands?

According to the Netherlands online gambling regulations, effective as of January 1st, 2017, wagering virtually on games is officially allowed in this country, but places that provide such services require a license. It is not yet a current license. This means that unlike countries where such type of entertainment is restricted on the governmental level, the Dutch will not be penalized for placing stakes online and the only factor they should be cautious about is the location they select for trusting their money with.

Perhaps, for this reason, all Dutch-licensed casinos are fully compatible with smartphones and tablets. And the gaming community in the Netherlands is taking advantage of the opportunity to play their favourite slots, table games, and so on.

Many casinos will publish their overall payout percentage, that is the combined percentage of returns from all the games on the site. This figure will generally be somewhere close to 97%, but of course this is only an indication as to how rewarding a particular casino will be. If you only play games like Blackjack using optimal strategy then you will probably enjoy far more success than if you stick to slot games, as the latter has a bigger house edge. However, the most important thing is that you are enjoying the casino gaming experience at an online casino which is rewarding to its Dutch customers.

By 2011 the Netherlands had begun to investigate ways of developing a new legislative framework to deal with e-gaming. The Secretary of Security and Justice admitted that laws were being ignored by Dutch citizens and a new law would allow more oversight. However, in 2012 the Netherlands Supreme Court ruled that the ban on online gaming was not in contravention of the EU law of free movement of services, and banks were asked to block transactions relating to foreign-based gambling operations. As this policy was not enforceable by law, most banks simply refused, and by 2013 the Netherlands government had announced its intention to liberalize the market and award licences to overseas operators.

Online casinos are quite popular in the Netherlands, despite the tight monopoly the state has on online casinos and traditional casinos. Most Dutch players choose to access international online casinos, along with those on De Lotto's website.
