Besides CBT, patients in online gambling addiction treatment may also receive other forms of therapy such as motivational interviewing (MI). This type of therapy was developed to help patients commit to change and work through ambivalence. The therapy explores the patient's arguments for change in a supportive and empathic manner. In a nutshell, MI has two phases. The first phase revolves around increasing motivation to change whereas the second focuses on consolidating commitment.

Support groups are also an important aspect of online gambling addiction treatment. For example, Gamblers Anonymous and other 12-step programs help patients build a support network where people share their experiences and support one another. Online gambling addiction is not something a person should try to overcome on their own. A well-structured treatment approach and support from loved ones are vital here. Treatment of many addictions requires ceasing usage of the addictive agent. That's not that easy to achieve here because one can't simply stop using the internet, because it has become an integral component of our lives.
