The main objective when you are playing slots is to spin the reel and line up rows of the same symbol. While you'll see a number of variations of types and themes of slots games, the basic objective is typically the same. You click a spin button, and if you line up the same object in a row, you win money. Often times the type of symbol that you can line up might be worth more than others, therefore your payout will vary based on the objects that you manage to line up.

When you play online slots, you should become familiar with the payable prior to playing. It is usually an available option in the menu within the game. It will tell you not just the rules of the game, but also the values of each of the symbols in the game.

It seems a little obvious, but in a jacks or better game, you want to switch out all cards that are not jacks or higher, or already forming part of another hand. A stray 6 is worthless, even if you land a pair with your replaced cards. More times than not, it's worth being aggressive in switching your cards for another draw, rather than hoping to make a hand out of something that just won't cut the mustard. For this reason, high value cards are worth even more in video poker than in the real game, because in many cases they will be the only cards capable of earning you a decent payout from the hand. Obviously three of a kind upwards are exceptions, but if you are aggressive in ditching lower value cards that are not paired or capable of forming a better hand, you play the odds more in your favour.

Some games will offer you the chance to double up on certain hands. It's up to you whether you take this or not, but it's a good idea to be wary.

Are you playing a positive RTP game? Don't take this – it's not worth the risk of doubling up, and by doubling up and losing you're actually reintroducing a wider house edge that could make your session unprofitable. But if you're keen to maximise your returns on winning hands, or you want to play a more volatile game, it can still be advantageous. Just be sure you're aware of the risks of this strategy, and the impact it can have on your game odds.

The actual mechanics of video poker couldn't be simpler. But it is still important to play with good strategy. There aren't any competing hands, so you don't have the same variance effect, but there are still no guarantees you will be able to make a winning hand from even the best starting draw. Aside from understanding the value of hands, and when to ditch versus when to hold, there are a few good strategy points to bear in mind as you start your video poker career.

The unusual thing about video poker is that it's possible to find games with a negative house edge – in other words, theoretically positive returns to the player. This comes from certain jackpot games, and from some game versions with wilds. These will generally offer you a better deal than machines with an in-built house edge, because you're not competing on a handicapped basis. Either way, be sure to find the highest RTP percentage game you can find and spend your time playing that – your chances of walking away in the black are higher.

Online casino operators such as DraftKings are currently leaning in hard to exclusive, in-house games to differentiate from competition.
