The number one difference is there is no bluffing involved. To win you must have the best hand. Casino hold'em live online will have other players in the hand but you only have to beat the dealer. The dealer never folds if you are in the hand so is the dealer. Unlike Texas hold'em where everybody may fold out and you only win blinds and antes, in casino hold'em if you get the 'nuts' you get paid out as the dealer is committed to the end. The actual betting is different as well. In Texas hold'em you pay the ante if there is one and a 'blind' bet if it's your turn then cards are dealt, this is similar in casino hold'em an ante is paid but there are no 'blinds'. Then it all drifts apart, in Texas hold'em there will be a round of bets where players may call, raise or fold until all bets are the same and then the 'flop' is dealt. Casino hold'em you just call a standard bet and then the 'flop' is dealt. So there is no raising in Casino hold'em you cannot bluff the dealer off a hand or extract maximum value from a hand either. House rules also apply with Casino Hold'em and some have a minimum winning hand. In Texas Hold'em at showdown the highest hand wins regardless of how weak it is.

One last thing to consider before entering your favourite live casino games is the available bet levels. These can range greatly across tables; for instance, VIP roulette bets start at £5 per round, while in Lightning Roulette, you can wager as low as £1 per round. Take that into account to not feel forced to bet more than you can afford.

As we said above, these payouts can vary a bit. However, most live dealer casino hold'em tables will have the pay table above or one that's very similar to it.

Some live casino hold'em games will have an optional jackpot side bet. The most popular of these is the Jumbo 7, a progressive from Evolution Gaming. However, other providers can have similar side bets, and not all Evolution Gaming tables will give access to this jackpot.
