Online live casino roulette

Thanks to simple rules, fast results, and variability of bets, there is a low entry threshold in live roulette. At the same time, playing with a dealer has additional advantages over the classic slot format:

It makes online live roulette a more exciting game. The only significant drawback is that there is no demo mode.

For 200 years, three versions were well-known in land-based casinos: European, American, and French.

Many historians attribute the invention to Blaise Pascal. He used a wheel similar to that used today.

With the popularization of gambling sites on the Internet, new varieties began to emerge. But the result is always determined by the throw of the ball into the wheel, divided into sectors and cells.

A popular type of roulette, considered a classic. The main goal is to guess which sector or cell the ball will land on and place your bet accordingly.

There are 36 numbers and one Zero. European rules differ in that they have oral bets. The name comes from land-based casinos where visitors predicted the outcome without placing chips on the field.

This table game originated in Europe but quickly became popular in the United States, where its specifications were slightly changed. To increase the profit, local casinos have added a cell to the wheel — a double Zero. It made it possible to increase the mathematical advantage of the casino to 5.26% compared to 2.63% in European roulette.

American roulette has two zeros. There are no oral bets here. Instead, separate predictions using one and two zero sectors are provided.

Live roulette casinos position it as the most profitable. As in the European type of roulette, the field is divided into 36 numbers and one Zero. There are no oral bets here either, but additional specifications compensate for part of the losses when the zero sector comes up if the prediction hasn't been made for it. In this case, players can receive part of the funds back.

Two balls are launched into the wheel through a special tube using compressed air. It allows the player to get not one, but two positive outcomes per spin. If the player places chips on a specific numeric and both balls fall into this cell, then the jackpot gets drawn.

This is a unique type of the game where online and offline players place their bets at the same table. The broadcast is conducted from a real gaming hall, not a software developer's studio. The rules follow the rules of European roulette.

This is yet another version of the classic live roulette, the only difference is the way of broadcasting. Usually, the cameras are focused on the croupier rather than the wheel or the field. However, the opposite is true here. Players are allowed to closely observe the process. The wheel is broadcasted from several angles.

The ball is thrown by the dealer, not by a mechanical device, as in many other games.

Players' attention is constantly focused on the wheel rotating. Thanks to the cameras showing it from several angles, the game ensures complete clarity of every draw.

This is the game where the the advantage of the casino is reduced to 1.3%. The essence of La Partage is that if you predict equal chances and the ball hits the zero sector, half of your chips are returned.

This version is best for those who enjoy high speed and pace. Rounds take no more than 25 seconds, which is 50% less than in standard games. This speed up is achieved by reducing the waiting time. Players place chips directly when the wheel spins. It yields at least 50 additional draws per hour.

European rules apply to this model, but the rounds go without the dealer's participation. The process is fully automated. The rotation of the wheel and the throw of the ball are carried out using two automated streams of air.

This is one of the most popular games by Evolution Gaming studio and it allows players to receive increased payouts under the right set of circumstances. Before each round, the RNG selects one or more numbers for where an additional multiplier is applied.

This version's main feature is the presence of a built-in slot with one reel. Players place side bets, the reel rotates simultaneously with the wheel and shows one of the seven paid symbols. It's possible to win back what you've bet or to multiply your bet by up to x80.

The popularity of live casinos with roulette is thanks to the elementary rules of this form of entertainment and its variability. Any beginner can learn the basics in 10-15 minutes. It takes no longer than that to study the payout table and all options of live roulette.

To make a bet in live roulette, players have to place a certain amount of chips in a field or at the intersection of the lines of neighboring cells. All predictions are divided into internal and external. The first is played within the numbered field, the second — outside of it.

Players have to make their predictions during the reception. If the game is played with the croupier, they tell the players when they can place chips.

Casino etiquette is a broad topic. It has many rules and features, but they mainly concern land-based casinos. In live roulette, it is enough to follow a few recommendations:

There are no requirements for clothing, tipping, or gestures on the Internet.

After the live roulette dealer stops accepting chips, the wheel is launched. After it rotates, the ball falls into one of the cells and determines the result. Then the payout is calculated and the money is transferred to the winning players of live roulette. Then the betting stage starts again.

Roulette is amid the most popular games in casino history and one of the oldest. Roulette, French for "small wheel", originates from a little-known game called Russian roulette.

Gamblers place bets on numbers or colors, betting the ball will land on their number or color after it hits the spinning wheel. The ball may bounce off any 37 numbered slots and rest in one of 38 colored slots with a 0, 00, 1-36 sequence across all available pockets for American roulette or 0 and 1-36 for European or French roulette.

Each time the ball makes one revolution around the wheel, the ball and pocket will have one chance in 38 of hitting a different spot on the wheel's outside rim. That's why you don't see many winning numbers on roulette. The odds of winning are almost 50-50 at best. It's a game of luck, with players betting on the skill of their tablemates.

In a nutshell, roulette is just like this – it's an old-school lottery-style game where you bet on the color or number that will come up after the roulette wheel stops spinning. Roulette is played throughout Europe and North America and is quickly becoming popular in Asia.
